Germany is traveling one record after the other, a real anniversary country in terms of Corona, even if we are still hanging over other EU countries: First we break the 500,000 person threshold in terms of corona infections, then the 10,000 person threshold in terms of deaths that are at least related to Corona, the 20,000 threshold new infections / day, over 300 new cases in a 7-day average / 100,000 inhabitants. Let's see what happens. The 600,000 will be exceeded tomorrow.

In the meantime, politics continues to do what it wants, or at least it tries. First it is said several times that vaccinations are only given on a voluntary basis, then Söder brings the urgency of compulsory vaccination into play and is already puzzling as to how one should treat those who refuse to be vaccinated. Now the CDU has a new idea, of all things with the overpriced but badly and incorrectly functioning German Corona app. Here, too, Spahn had always emphasized that anyone can install this app voluntarily, there is no obligation. The Bremen CDU parliamentary group leader Röwekamp is now calling for a law to make the app mandatory. This is complete nonsense and shows that some talk first, then think, instead of the other way around. Also for Mr Röwekamp: The app doesn't work on old cell phones, doesn't work on certain cell phone manufacturers, and he can't determine whether I take my cell phone with me or just leave it at home. There are other reasons, but he can work them out himself.

There is also news in Göttingen again: The number of infections is rising and rising, now we are at 66. In the meantime, it is also clear: This year's Christmas market 2020 is completely canceled. It is now planned to present individual stands in the old town so that there is no crowd, but still a Christmas atmosphere arises. Other things work out worse in Göttingen: As is now known, almost all health authorities have personnel problems to cope with all contacts and corona tasks, so they are urgently looking for temporary staff. Also the city of Göttingen. But no decision has been made about it for over a month, and the hiring is still dragging on despite various applications. It remains to be seen whether that will be decided this year.

An interesting message comes from the Free Medical Association in Essen. This calls for the Ministry of Health to be more honest about the fact that corona tests, vaccinations against flu and pneumococci are not available for everyone and for every occasion. Due to the scarcity, people at risk, medical staff or groups at risk are given preference; apart from people and groups with a special status such as footballers or politicians, certain incumbents, etc. The laboratories are now also warning of overload.

And there is also something like that: If the general practitioner is overburdened with no free appointments, then it happens: Despite the symptoms of illness that are typical of the symptoms that occur in corona, neither an immediate doctor's appointment in the so-called intensive consultation hour, which was set up especially for possible corona patients, nor a corona test. Obviously one would like to wait and see how it develops further. Hopefully positive for the environment. No joke.

Meanwhile, the Lower Saxony Higher Administrative Court reports on various urgent motions against the catering closings, they are being "showered", according to a spokesman. Apart from that, further applications from e.g. Cosmetic studios that do not feel that they are treated equally with regard to the hairdressers. Sounds to me as if the court is waiting to be allowed to lift this ban, at least in cosmetic studios. If you already name the law, against which the lawsuit makes sense, so to speak. An invitation. After all, the Bavarian Administrative Court has not granted a complaint by a hotel chain that would have liked to overturn the ban on accommodation and the restaurant closings. Two complaints about overnight stays on Sylt were also rejected by the Schleswig Higher Administrative Court. There are still people who believe that their vacation fun and leisure time take priority over the health of others.

The Oberhammer are around 200 party guests who had to celebrate a Halloween party on a clinic premises in Munich and who destroyed and partly stolen clinic utensils. The event was advertised on Instagram and tickets were also sold. While the normal population is gagged with new, sometimes questionable corona measures, the opponents in Germany apparently still have an easy game: Demos without mask compulsory, celebrations and parties without the regulatory authorities noticing anything, but woe to you as ordinary citizens in a side street of your city with no mask compulsory Mask encountered although no other person can be seen. This is stupid Germany today.
