The last days of summer are now over, it's getting colder and rainier - and not only is the cold time increasing, but according to well-known corona experts, the corona wave is now coming back. Everyone should be vigilant, but wait: No problem, Mr Spahn gives the all-clear: Germany is almost never prepared, many beds are free, and everything else is TOP, enough masks and protective clothing there, disinfectants too, with toilet paper, he is silent from. And because everything is going so well, in Germany, unfortunately not in the EU, although it is also going up there, and the corona numbers are steadily increasing, but I have new information on this and other topics; thanks to the last federal press conference.

At the beginning, he made precisely this topic, increasing numbers, the key point and clearly stated that in view of our numbers and those around us, the federal government is not making any further relaxation. Yes, but some state minister-presidents see it very differently and go on cheerfully. But he is not deterred: Our numbers have shot up (oops) and even more so in the neighboring countries. We are now in the phase where we can no longer understand everything. Oh, nobody said that before. But despite these increases in and around Germany, no border closings or increased entry controls are planned, according to the Interior Ministry. Aha, the numbers have yet to increase, we're fully involved. In addition, the topic of exit cards for travelers, they should now be checked more precisely and checked with the passports by the federal police. But why only? In response to a question from a journalist, the press spokeswoman for the Ministry of the Interior cannot explain that either, and how the cards are currently being sent to the health authorities is obviously a mystery to her. Only 30 minutes later did she get the answers from the ministry via a notebook, saying that some cards were filled out incorrectly and incompletely. No, I wouldn't have thought of it at all. The cards are currently being sent directly from the airport authorities to the health authorities, but this is now supposed to be done by the federal police, who virtually check and withdraw the cards at the same time as passport controls. That is and is all managed so well.

However, not everything is so rosy, not even in Germany. In the meantime, studies have shown that even mild corona disease courses have more severe long-term consequences, and the end of the knowledge is far from being reached here. The tests are now extremely ramped up; Germany currently has around 1.1 million PCR tests per week. The laboratory capacities were expanded from 90 to 185 laboratories, so theoretically test increases would still be possible. When I hear that I wonder who is actually getting all the tests; So I and many of my friends have never had a test, who gets it all? I understand, every footballer twice a week, in the hospital every day, etc. Then they go away quickly.

And we also have a winner this week, and you won't believe who he is: Mr. Laschet, the eternal corona winner who has already amassed a considerable point account and can hardly be recovered. Those who give a lot of freedom also have high corona numbers. This time the city of Hamm, which has a record of 87 infected to 100,000 inhabitants. For this, the citizens are only allowed to stand together in groups of 5 from 2 households for the next 2 weeks, and woe to a group of 4 from 4 households, such as e.g. in schools the playground and such. That is why there is now an increased requirement for face masks in schools. And Mr. Laschet already has an idea of how the numbers are going down again in North Rhine-Westphalia: Yes, if all citizens would stick to the AHA rule. Well, Mr. Laschet, that has never been the case and never will be. But I can comfort Mr. Laschet a little: Last week, on a key date in Lower Saxony, an inspection of the mask requirement in buses and trains was carried out with almost 40 inspectors. Of around 5500 people checked, around 28% wore the masks incorrectly or not at all. Proceedings were initiated against 15 total objectors. But then again in North Rhine-Westphalia: In Düsseldorf, too, the police presence had to be increased extremely in the old town, because the party-goers are increasing. Angry, that's the right word, because more and more, especially among young people, there are confrontations with the police regarding insults and bottle-throwing, and more and more young men with a migration background are observed. We have been dealing with this topic several times in German cities in the past few weeks, except Göring Eckhardt, who ignores it. Typically green. And one more point for Laschet (who also collects like crazy): As the Rheinische Post reports today, in September NRW allowed ALL requested major events with more than 1000 participants, including trade fairs and sporting events, 9 of them with more than 5000 participants. Anyone wondering about increasing numbers should have themselves checked out.

And I would like to mention Mr. Spahn again, because he tried the 2nd attempt with his immunity card, but failed again. A few months ago (I reported) there was this request already, the problem was the uncertainty of the tests and the time periods, apart from that the regulations for participation with and without ID in public life, keyword two-class society. And that's exactly why the German Ethics Council rejected this request again completely and unanimously. As long as there is no certainty that people with this ID are absolutely safe, vaccinated, etc. Looking to the future if all these requirements are met, there is currently no agreement on whether such an ID is needed and it makes sense, but as I said, looking into the future. It remains to be seen why there are already companies that have produced these immunity cards as samples (perhaps they want to be the first in the Spahn tender for production).

But Mr. Spahn doesn't get tired at all during these times but is in top form: Now he wants to set up so-called fever clinics, since more and more people with colds, flu or possibly corona and therefore with a fever go to the doctors in autumn and winter. But has the idea been thought up at all: Where should the fever clinics be set up so spontaneously, how many in Germany, how are they equipped and, above all, who runs them when so many doctors and nurses are missing? Where do they come from so suddenly or is that the Filipino and Vietnamese strategy of the Foreign Office, why are supposedly trained medical workers carted to Germany from these countries? It's possible. Because Spahn hasn't said anything about that yet; not even who should pay that again. Oh yes, the health insurance contributions will increase at the beginning of 2021, so that's already regulated. But what is that? Now the medical profession is reporting that they would be missing patients if all the colds, flu, vaccinations, etc. are eliminated in winter. The fight for patients is on. But the nice thing about it: Flu patients have the chance to take Corona with them, whoever comes with Corona will pick up their flu right away.

And last but not least, some spontaneous information: Our dear Foreign Minister Maas is in Corona quarantine because one of his bodyguards is sick with Corona. And Altmaier goes with you, better is better. And Löw doesn't think it's particularly good to still play football with spectators in a risk area at the moment. Prof. Drosten now sees the pandemic approaching us and Europe with full force, it should be ready soon. Verdi, on the other hand, is helping to ensure that the pandemic does not spread too much again in Germany. Hence the warning strikes in the public service, then the employees stay at home, so no contagion. You can kill two birds with one stone.
